Smocked Dresses

Saturday 2 January 2016 (2016-01-02T14:51:00Z)

Our girls's smocked dresses are entirely embroidered by hand.

Historically, 'smock' was a traditional garment from the 19th century worn by English peasants, including boys. It is characterised by tight pleats on the front (and on the back), and embroidery. 'Smock is now a speciality of the embroideresses of the island of Madagascar.

Their craft was introduced by English missionaries. Each dress is unique as it is embroidered by hand. Our fabrics are 100% cotton and are carefully selected so as to offer a wide range of choice (patterns include flowers, Vichy, spots, plain, etc)

The dresses are in piqué cotton, and ideal for mid-season.

They are available in various colours and sizes, from 6 months to 8 years.

Pinafore Smocked Dresses

Tunic Smocking Dresses

The pinafore dress is made from worsted cotton, and is lighter than the one in piqué cotton. It is ideal for summer. It is possible to wear a T-shirt underneath during the mid-season.

They are available in various colours and sizes, from 6 months to 10 years.

Pinafore Smocked Dresses in Patterned Fabrics

Smocking dresses are now affordable for everyone, and are no longer the priviledge of children of royal families.

Beside the conventional well-behaved type, we also make dresses from brightly coloured fabric that are just as classy.

Both romantic and multicultural, these dresses are elegant in all circumstances.

Every detail is controlled, which is what makes all the difference.

The cross-over pattern at the back, along with the waist-enhancing belt raise the posture.

Embroidery on the pink dress

Delicately embroidered flowers

The embroideresses work meticulously and with passion. The result is there: a beautiful romantic bouquet.
